NEW DONATIONS TO FUND ANNOUNCED

The New York Times and the Vincent Astor Foundation have donated, respectively, $25,000 and $10,000 to the Barnard College Development Fund. Both gifts are unrestricted as to use.

In making the $25,000 gift, Arthur Hays Sulzberger, publisher of The New York Times and husband of Barnard trustee Iphigene Ochs Sulzberger '14 (who, in turn, is director of special activities for the Times), said that "The New York Times is interested in the cultural development of New York City, and is happy to make this gift to Barnard to further this end."

Another gift to the Fund, $2,000 to establish a German prize, was made by an alumna who wishes to remain anonymous. The donor will contribute additional amounts to this fund in the future, and the income from the fund is to be awarded to a student "showing particular excellence and interest in the study of German, in addition to good competence in the other humanities." The prize, established to create greater interest in the study of the German language and literature, was awarded this year to Miss Ursula Hess, of 635 Riverside Drive, Manhattan (for picture of Miss Hess, see page 3). The donor identified herself only as a former student who had specialized in German studies.

Also — a final payment has recently been received from the estate of Edith P. Stricker '99, bringing the total sum to $27,897.71.

PRIZES ARE AWARDED
AT SPECIAL ASSEMBLY

Fourteen Students Honored

Ten of the prizes awarded to Barnard students this year were announced at the College's first annual honors assembly on Tuesday, May 1, which took the place of the traditional Class Night ceremonies. Other prize announcements are also included here, but the complete list is not available as this issue of the Monthly goes to press and additional prize-winners will be announced in the July issue.

The awards and recipients (whose pictures appear on page three) are as follows:

The 1951 Allen Prize in Mathematics, awarded to "an outstanding senior who is working in mathematics or physics and has chosen to do graduate work in her field": Joan Steen '51, of Laurelton, N. Y.

The Estelle M. Allison Prize, awarded annually to a student for excellence in literature: Naomi Loeb '51, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Columbia University Press Prize, awarded to a sophomore for distinguished writing in the "Barnard Bulletin": Phebe Ann Marr '53, of Darien, Conn.

The Dean Prize in German, awarded annually to "that member of the senior class . . . who has throughout her course done the best work in German language and literature": Helene Bottjer '51, of Great Neck, Long Island.

The newly-established German Prize, awarded to a student "showing particular excellence and interest in the study of German, in addition to good competence in the other humanities": Ursula Hess '53, of New York City.

The Jenny A. Gerard Medal, awarded annually to the undergraduate student of American birth at Barnard "who is most proficient in American colonial

At the second annual Pied Piper Carnival, held at Barnard on Saturday, May 5, assembled children try their skill at pitching pennies. A total of $818.62 was raised for the Barnard College Development Fund at the Carnival, which was sponsored by the undergraduate Development Fund Committee. Approximately 1,700 people gathered at the College on Carnival day, and a merry time was had by all. Union employees of the College, who belong to Local 264 of the Transport Workers Union of America, C.I.O., contributed $150 for the event.

CAMP LATCHKEY . . .

Alumnae who have been long "in city pent," and would like to plan a weekend at Barnard Camp this summer, are urged to make arrangements to get the key from Miss Henrietta Smith, of the Barnard physical education department, before she leaves for vacation on August 1.

STATE OF UNION AT BARNARD REPORTED

On an average of twice a week since November 22, 1950, meetings have been held at Barnard to negotiate a new contract with Local 264, Transport Workers' Union of America, C.I.O., the previous contract having expired on December 16, 1950. On March 28, 1951, a new contract was signed.

Barnard was represented at the negotiations by Miss Jean T. Palmer, general secretary of the College, Miss Frances Maisch, superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, and Miss Mary Alice Currier, director of food services. The Union's representatives were James Gallagher, president of Barnard's Local, Walter Leistriz, vice president, Joseph Fahey, recording secretary, Walter Brown, treasurer, and John Cahill from the Transport Workers Union of America. Both groups have had advice from their respective lawyers.

The new contract, which is retroactive to December 17, 1950, will continue in force until December 16, 1952, with the understanding that the wage scales may be reopened for discussion on December 16, 1951.

Terms of Contract

Under the terms of the new contract, regular employees have received an increase in pay of 8c an hour, raising the hourly rate of pay for the lowest brackets from 77¢ to 85¢, plus two meals a day. Pay in the highest brackets has been increased from $1.60 to $1.68 an hour. This represents a ten per cent increase for those in the lower brackets and five per cent for those in the higher brackets. Hourly employees have always been paid at a higher rate because of their short shifts and irregular schedules. Their former hourly rate of $.95 a hour plus meals has been raised to $1.01, an increase of six per cent.

Barnard has agreed to effect a formal pension plan no later than July 1, 1951; pensions to date have been on an informal "pay as you go" basis. The grievance procedures have been revised to insure prompt hearings whenever an employee considers that he (or she) has received unfair treatment contrary to the regulations in the contract. The lay-off provisions have been amended so that seniority is the factor of greatest weight, and ability will be considered

SENIOR WEEK PLANNED

Plans for Senior Week are complete as this issue of the Monthly goes to press. The first event for 1951 graduates will be the senior ball on Friday, June 1, at 9:30 P.M. at the Ambassador Hotel. The baccalaureate service will be conducted by Chaplain James A. Pike at 4 P.M. on Sunday, June 3, in St. Paul's Chapel, and tea will follow in Brooks Hall. On Monday, June 4, step singing and the traditional ivy ceremony will be held on Barnard's North Lawn, and that evening at 7 P.M. the annual senior banquet will be held in the Hewitt Hall Dining Room.

On Tuesday, June 5, the annual A.A.B.C. meeting at 4 P.M. will be followed by a reception at 5 P.M., Commencement Supper at 6:30, and a program of entertainment at 8:30 in the Barnard Hall gymnasium. Graduating seniors and members of the faculty will, of course, be guests of the alumnae at Commencement Supper.

On Thursday, June 7, festivities will be concluded when the seniors attend the Columbia University graduation ceremonies at 3 P.M. and receive their diplomas from Dean McIntosh.

only when the College can prove that difference in ability justifies such action.

In order to meet the expense of these changes, which have been estimated at approximately $20,000, other expenses will be adjusted. The residence halls, for example, will be put on a five year painting schedule, instead of four. Money has been raised by the Development Fund for certain basic improvements (such as alternating current in Milbank), which will cut down on future repairs and replacement expenses. The money raised for scholarships will release general funds, formerly used for scholarships. Mr. Rockefeller's gift of a million dollars has increased in value and paid higher dividends this year.

Although the College administrators hope, by these means, to balance the budget for 1951-1952, there will be no operating profit to apply against the accumulated deficit of $457,000. There will, however, be no tuition rise in 1951-1952, and the College will continue to raise funds on the one hand and try to find ways of reducing expenses on the other, in an effort to achieve a permanently balanced budget.

ALUMNAE IN THE NEWS—

A front-page feature story about Herawati Latip Diah '41 and her husband, Muhamad Diah, both editors of influential newspapers in Indonesia, appeared in the New York Herald Tribune on Sunday, May 6, as one of a series of articles entitled, "Tales of South Asia." Author of the article was James A. Michener, famed for his book "Tales of the South Pacific," on which the hit musical "South Pacific" was based. The story was date-lined "Djakarta, Indonesia," and the opening paragraphs follow:

"One of the most powerful married couples in East Asia today are the attractive, intelligent young Diahs, of Djakarta in Indonesia. Muhamad Diah is a handsome young man in his early thirties, editor of the country's most important newspaper, the daily 'Merdeka.'"

"His wife, Herawati Diah, is the pretty and determined young editor of the equally influential weekly 'Merdeka,' the Indonesian counterpart of 'Time' magazine. In addition to editing these journals, the Diahs own a good deal of stock and also serve as presidents of their respective boards. Definitely, they are young people on their way up."

FUND REPORTS

The following coverage report gives the statistics in organized areas for the Barnard College Development Fund as of March 19th, 1951. In every forthcoming issue of the Monthly for the remainder of the academic year, a similar chart will appear, to keep alumnae up to date on Fund progress.

"Opening date" indicates the month in which actual solicitation began, or is scheduled to start, in each area. "Number alumnae" indicates the number of prospects originally assigned to each area. "Number reported" indicates the number of individual prospects on whom some word has been received in the Development Fund office. I includes contributors, alumnae who have refused to give or who, for some other reason are not able to give to the Fund, and alumnae who have moved away. Eventually this figure should equal the "Number alumnae" in each area. "No. Cont." indicates the number of contributors; if an individual gives more than once, it is counted as one gift. "Amt. Subs." means amount subscribed.

Rita Girolamo '47, a fourth year student at New York Medical College, has

Government — Theory and Practice

BARNARD'S DEPARTMENT

The total number of Barnard students taking government courses in October, 1950, was 289. Of these, twenty girls were majoring in government and sixteen others were combining government with other fields to form a combination major (thirteen students were combining government with history, two with economics, and one with sociology). In addition, sixteen students were majoring in international relations, for which specific studies in government, economics, and history are required.

Professor Thomas P. Peardon, executive director of the Government Department since 1940, says it is his clear impression that today's students display most interest in international relations and in the more practical aspects of American politics.

"These interests, however, vary from time to time, partly in accordance with the trends of world affairs," he adds. "For example, during and just after World War II, there was a tremendous interest in all aspects of foreign government and international politics. When we offered a course in Far East for the first time in the fall of 1945 we were surprised and somewhat shocked to have a registration of sixty-five. With the end of the war in the Pacific, this registration went down sharply. It has recently risen again, partly because of the Korean affair, but also because of the vigor and penetration displayed by Mr. William Henderson, instructor in government, in his treatment of the Far East. There is always a good deal of interest, however, in general American government and in comparative government and a somewhat less strong interest in political theory."

Recent changes in the Department have included, besides the introduction of courses on the Far East, the inception of a course entitled "American Political Parties," the revival of "The Practice of Politics," a course which was started in 1925 by Professor Raymond Moley, and an expansion of seminar work for seniors. Next year three senior seminars will be offered: one on comparative government and international relations, to be taught by Professor Peardon and Mr. Henderson; one on American government, to be taught by Mrs. Mary Fairbanks, associate in government, and Mrs. Louise Gerrard, lecturer in government; and one on political theory, to be taught by Mr. John B. Stewart, lecturer in government. The work in the Soviet Union has also been expanded, and now comprises one term on political institutions and one term on foreign policies; the instructor for this course is Mrs. Ruth A. Rosa, lecturer in Russian Studies.

Other Courses

Other courses given in the Department include an introduction to modern government, studies in "Comparative Government," "An Introduction to American Government," "American Political Life," "English Government and Politics," "International Relations," "Governments of Latin America," "The Soviet Union," "The U.S.S.R. in World Affairs," "Far Eastern Political Institutions," "International Politics in the Far East," "Social Legislation," "Constitutional Law of the United States," "The History of Political Thought," "Administration and Modern Government," and a course especially designed for seniors engaged in writing theses.

There are now eight teaching members of the History Department. Four are full-time members—Professor Peardon, Mr. Henderson, Mrs. Fairbanks, and Mrs. Gerrard—and four are part-time. The part-time members are Professor Moley, Professor Jane Clark Carey, Mrs. Rosa, and Mr. Stewart.

Professor Moley, who first came to teach at Barnard in 1923 and became executive director of the Department in the same year, is now the senior member of the Department and is an associate editor of Newsweek Magazine. He served, in 1933, as assistant Secretary of State under President Franklin D. Roosevelt, and has subsequently made frequent trips over the United States to acquire first hand information about political situations. In 1949 he published a book entitled "27 Masters of Politics in a Personal Perspective," and last year was sent to England by Newsweek to cover the British elections. He is now engaged in working on a volume of interpretation of American politics.

Professor Peardon's special interests are in comparative government and the history of political thought. In comparative government he concerns himself particularly with British government, and in the history of political thought he is especially interested in the ideas of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. He contributed an essay on Sir John Seeley to a volume honoring Professor Carlton Hayes entitled "Nationalism and Internationalism," which was published in 1950; another article by Professor Peardon, "Bentham's Ideal Republic," will appear soon in the "Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science."

Professor Carey is known to all alumnae for the course in Constitutional law, which she still teaches. She has also, in recent years, devoted much time to the study of international affairs and organizations, and, in this connection, has done reports for the Foreign Policy Association and other bodies. She has, on various occasions, served as consultant for the State Department, and was recently sent to Germany in this connection; she is leaving for Germany again this month on a similar mission. She is the author of numerous articles, the latest of which, entitled "Political Organization Among Refugees and Ex-pelees in Western Germany," appears in the June, 1951, issue of "The Political Science Quarterly," and two books, "Deportation of Aliens from the United States to Europe," published in 1931, and "The Rise of a New Federalism," published in 1938.

YOUR SERVE?

The Arden tennis courts will be available again to alumnae this summer from June 11 through September 11. Permit tags, for which the fee is $10, may be obtained at the Alumnae Office, 301 Barnard Hall. After August 15, the fee is reduced to $5. Checks should be made payable to Barnard College.

The courts will be open every day until 8:30 P.M., weather permitting. The permit tags entitle the owner to the use of one court with one or three guests, but are not transferable.

Mrs. Fairbanks, who spent five years working for the government in Washington before coming to Barnard, is particularly interested in public administration. She maintains her contacts with Washington, and is accustomed to taking a group of students there once a year in connection with the course in American government. Mrs. Gerrard, who has also had direct experience in government service, is chiefly interested in American political parties and the more practical aspects of political participation. Last year she passed her examination for the doctorate, and is now working on her thesis. Mrs. Fairbanks and Mrs. Gerrard were largely responsible for the planning of the Political Institute last fall.

Mr. Henderson is a graduate of Hamilton College who served with the Navy in the Pacific before coming to Barnard. He is deeply interested in the Far East as well as in general international relations. During the war, he learned Japanese and participated in the questioning of Japanese prisoners. He is currently working for his Ph.D. degree, and is in demand as a public speaker.

More Faculty Activities

Mrs. Rosa, who divides her time between the History and Government Departments at Barnard, recently graduated from the Russian Institute of Columbia University. She is also a graduate of Pembroke College and has worked for the U. S. government in London. An article written by Mrs. Rosa, "Soviet Theory of Peoples Democracy," recently appeared in "World Politics." Mr. Stewart, the newest member of the Department, is working for his doctorate at Columbia. Next year he will be a full time member of the Department, giving the new seminar in political theory in which he will direct an analysis of the nature of liberalism and of democracy, the course in the history of political thought, and a section of the comparative government course. Part-time assistance to the Department has also been given this year by Lois Stone '48, who majored in international relations at Barnard, and has just completed her work at the Russian Institute and passed her oral examination for the doctorate in public law. She is now undertaking her dissertation, which will be in the field of international law.

When Professor Peardon was asked to define the objectives of Barnard's Government Department, he replied as follows: "We should like our majors to derive from their study an appreciation of the tradition of government under law which is the most precious part of the political heritage of eastern Europe. We do not regard the study of government as a matter of techniques or as vocational in aim, but rather as one of the oldest of the liberal arts. Of course the study of government must give preparation for political participation and the better performance of the duties of citizenship. That we can learn from Aristotle. But this preparation should consist not merely in the analysis of contemporary phenomena, but also (or even more) in the contemplative reading of political history and theory."

A MAJOR'S CAREER

After majoring in government at Barnard, Ethel V. Weiss graduated magna cum laude in 1944, and was awarded the Murray Fellowship and named a member of Phi Beta Kappa. She had been very active in extra-curricular activities, spending much of her time at

ETHEL WEISS '44

Earl Hall in connection with her duties as treasurer of the University Christian Association, chairman of the Barnard Interfaith Council, and representative to Silver Bay conferences. She was also active in Representative Assembly and other campus groups, and during her last two years at Barnard spent about twenty hours a week as hostess in a serviceman's canteen near Times Square. Her special academic interest was American government, particularly public administration; her minor was economics. She commuted to College all four years, and says now that she does not feel she was under any handicap in so doing, since it gave her a chance to combine college, home, and community interests.

She was appointed, after graduating, as an "intern" with the government training program conducted by the National Institute of Public Affairs in Washington, D. C. She served her internship with U. S. Senator Robert F. Wagner (D.—N.Y.), author of the famed Wagner Act and other important New Deal economic and social legislation.

"There," she says, "I was able to learn first-hand not only about the legislative process and the operation of a U. S. senator's office and senatorial committee, but also about the operation of political campaign headquarters during a major election year." (Editor's note: Senator Wagner was a successful candidate for reelection in 1944.)

After the internship, she had six months of "more 'down to earth' experience—as opposed to the glamour of 'The Hill'" when she worked as a wage agent for the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U. S. Department of Labor, traveling in New York and New Jersey to visit factories and collect data on wages and related plant practices. Then she returned to Senator Wagner as assistant clerk of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, of which he was chairman. At that time the Committee worked on such controversial economic problems as the O.P.A., the British Loan, the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Housing Bill, and the R.F.C.

Spurred by her growing interest in economics, she returned to Columbia on a Graduate Residence Scholarship for a year of graduate work in economics. Her interest centered in labor economics and, after getting her M.A. in June, 1947, she worked for a year as a labor economist with the New York State Department of Labor in New York City, doing research work in prevailing wages for use in the state unemployment insurance program. She returned to Washington in the early days of the Marshall Plan to accept a job as the research and administrative assistant to Donald Stone, the director of administration of the Economic Cooperation Administration (this, incidentally, was the first job that Miss Ruth Houghton filled in her capacity as director of the Placement Office at Barnard).

"Even though I was learning a lot about administration in that job," she says, "I was not able to use as much of my economics training as I liked, and therefore, after one and a half years, switched to the job I now hold—labor economist with the Labor Law Division of the Women's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor. Here I have a chance to combine public administration with labor economics within the framework of a governmental economic agency. I am concerned primarily with the problems involved in obtaining and administering labor laws for women—laws concerning minimum wages, maximum hours, night work, prohibited occupations, maternity benefits, and equal pay. Most of these are state laws, but there is also some activity on the federal front. The Women's Bureau is an advisory agency, not an operating one, so this means work with State Labor Department officials, state legislators, union officials, and organizations such as the YWCA, AAUW, Business and Professional Women's Clubs, as well as with many federal officials. It involves travel throughout the country to discuss these problems with them or to address their meetings."

Her present responsibilities also include writing articles for publication, preparing statements for legislative committees holding hearings on various bills and amendments, and working on wage surveys and 'cost of living' budgets for the use of state minimum wage agencies and boards.

"THE MUTINOUS WIND"

Elizabeth Reynard '22, who taught at Barnard from 1925 to 1949, has written a new book, "The Mutinous Wind," published June 5 by the Riverside Press, Cambridge. Subtitled "A Sorcerer's Tale," the story is catalogued as "fiction" since it integrates into one story several strains from Cape Cod folk lore. In an earlier book, "The Narrow Land," Miss Reynard recounted much of this lore, but in "The Mutinous Wind" she skillfully weaves together the lives of various folk characters, including the mischievous Sand Dobbies who jump in and out of the story.

Excellent reading for this summer—or any time—"The Mutinous Wind" is, for those who enjoy fantasy and folktales, the kind of book that cannot be put down, but must be read to the finish once started. Characters are sharply drawn, and the Cape Cod flavor is rich and unmistakable.
